

How we work with you in terms of your sexuality and relationship choices

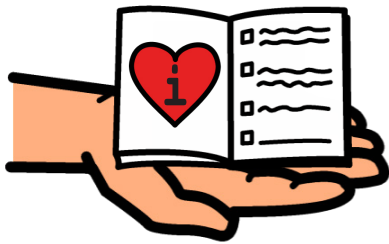

This is about Northcott's Sexuality and Relationship Policy

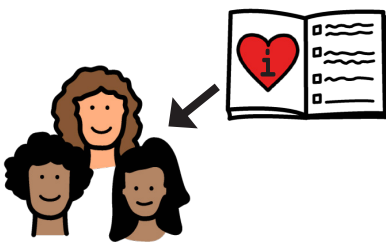

Our Policy is:

Everyone has the right to make their own choices, learn about their body, sex and relationships, enjoy sexual relationships and be free from abuse.

We offer opportunities for you to access sexual health, sexuality and relationship information and education.

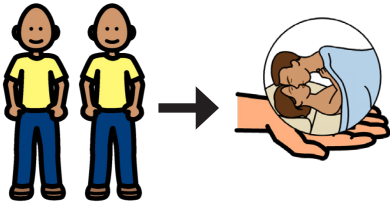

We make sure that the staff supporting you have opportunities to access sexual health, sexuality and relationship information and education.

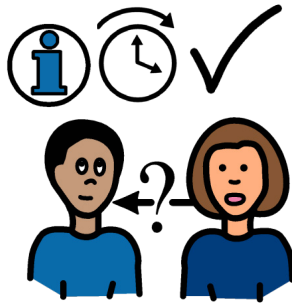

We respect the choices you make about your relationships.

We support you to access sex services and support you with preparation for a sexual activity within the law.

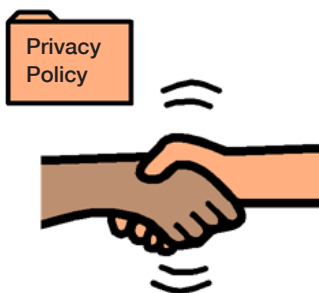

We support you by having two staff members present when supporting your preparation to be involved in a sexual activity with another person or persons.

We make sure that you have all the information you need and the time to ask questions.

We do not make assumptions or judgements about your sexual preference or the sexual activities that you choose to be involved in.

We respect your right for privacy and dignity when providing services to you.
